

Your Faction: Anti-Mission

The ANTI-MISSION members of the Jesuit Council are exactly as they sound. The goal of the faction is to gather enough support (and votes) to block sending a mission further into New France than has been attempted before.

Your job is to persuade the Indeterminate members of the Jesuit Council to see your side and to vote with you.

General Objective

The goal of this game is to use the movie Black Robe as a “primary” source. Imagine it as a record of an actual mission that has made it back to the Jesuit Council.

The Jesuit Council is now set to decide on whether or not there will be another mission sent to New France, based upon the information contained in the narrative account (Black Robe) and other knowledge which is contained on your character sheet.

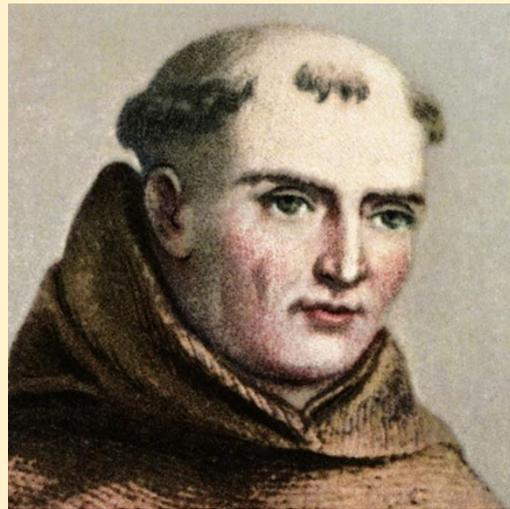

You are a member of the Jesuit Council. As an Anti-Mission member, you do not want to send more good Godly men into danger in the uncharted territories of New France.

You and your fellow Anti-Mission Jesuits believe that the benefits of converting the Native Americans DO NOT outweigh the substantial risks, either financial or loss of men.

Convince the Jesuit Council to NOT send a new mission further into New France.

AGAINST THE MISSION

Character Name: Johannes Schmidt

Your Character:

Johannes grew up in a Lutheran duchy in the Holy Roman Empire. He was born in 1592. As he grew and the rulers of the duchy changed, the land switched between Lutheran and Catholic several times. Johannes was drawn to the order that the Catholic church provided and craved brotherhood of fellow scholars. He joined the Order at 22 years old.

Secret Objective:

As a German Jesuit, you don't feel that more missions need to be sent to New France. That just gives the French more power and land. Instead, you'd rather send a mission to an established, or at least, less dangerous area. You rather think that China sounds great this time of year.

Convince the Jesuit Council to vote in the affirmative on sending a new mission to China.
