

Your Faction: Anti-Mission

The ANTI-MISSION members of the Jesuit Council are exactly as they sound. The goal of the faction is to gather enough support (and votes) to block sending a mission further into New France than has been attempted before.

Your job is to persuade the Indeterminate members of the Jesuit Council to see your side and to vote with you.

General Objective

The goal of this game is to use the movie Black Robe as a “primary” source. Imagine it as a record of an actual mission that has made it back to the Jesuit Council.

The Jesuit Council is now set to decide on whether or not there will be another mission sent to New France, based upon the information contained in the narrative account (Black Robe) and other knowledge which is contained on your character sheet.

You are a member of the Jesuit Council. As an Anti-Mission member, you do not want to send more good Godly men into danger in the uncharted territories of New France.

You and your fellow Anti-Mission Jesuits believe that the benefits of converting the Native Americans DO NOT outweigh the substantial risks, either financial or loss of men.

Convince the Jesuit Council to NOT send a new mission further into New France.

AGAINST THE MISSION

Character Name: Rene-Robert de Martin

Your Character:

Rene-Robert was born in 1599 in Paris. He was born in wedlock but both of his parents soon died of a bout of plague and he was left to the Church as a ward. He joined the Jesuits as soon as they would take him. As he grew became rather risk-averse (afraid of plague and the savagery inherent in the rest of the world) and has not left on any missions himself.

Secret Objective:

You are afraid for the safety of your fellow Jesuits in sending them even further into the dangerous New France territories. Instead, you would much rather see a mission sent to Maryland, an area sympathetic to Catholics and as a Frenchman, it would be great to make headway into the English colonies.

Convince the Jesuit Council to send a mission to Maryland.
