

Your Faction: Pro-Mission

The PRO-MISSION members of the Jesuit Council are exactly as they sound. The goal of the faction is to gather enough support (and votes) to send a mission further into New France than has been attempted before.

Your job is to persuade the Indeterminate members of the Jesuit Council to see your side and to vote with you.

General Directive

The goal of this game is to use the movie Black Robe as a "primary" source. Imagine it as a record of an actual mission that has made it back to the Jesuit Council.

The Jesuit Council is now set to decide on whether or not there will be another mission sent to New France, based upon the information contained in the narrative account (Black Robe) and other knowledge which is contained on your character sheet.

You are a member of the Jesuit Council. As a Pro-Mission member, you wish to have another mission sent to New France.

You and your fellow Pro-Mission Jesuits believe that the benefits of converting the Native Americans outweigh the substantial risks, either financial or loss of men.

Convince the Jesuit Council to send a mission further into New France.

PRO-MISSION

Character Name: Albinus de Saint-Aubin

Your Character:

Albinus was born in a small village in France around 1620. He was the third son born to his farming parents. From an early age, he showed remarkable interest and aptitude for preaching and learning. He was taught to read and write by the village priest who took a liking to the boy. When he was 15 he was sent to a Jesuit school in the south of France and took his vows at the age of 18. He has spent almost all of his life in France and is proud of his nation for their work in securing semi-peaceful colonies in the New World for God and Crown.

Secret Objective:

As a Frenchman, you think it makes the most sense to send another Frenchman further into New France. You have heard great things about an up and coming young Jesuit, Father Jacques Marquette. You want him to be the one to lead the new mission to New France.

Convince the Jesuit Council to send Father Jacques Marquette on a mission.
