

Your Faction: Indeterminate

The Indeterminate members of the Jesuit Council do not have an opinion (at the start of the game) as to whether or not a mission should be sent further into New France.

Therefore, you should be open to listening to the arguments of either side. If you are persuaded by one, vote with that faction. If you are not persuaded by either, you may abstain from the vote.

General Directive

The goal of this game is to use the movie Black Robe as a “primary” source. Imagine it as a record of an actual mission that has made it back to the Jesuit Council.

The Jesuit Council is now set to decide on whether or not there will be another mission sent to New France, based upon the information contained in the narrative account (Black Robe) and other knowledge which is contained on your character sheet.

You are a member of the Jesuit Council, and you get to vote for, against, or abstain to help decide whether or not to send a mission further into New France.

As an Indeterminate, you do not have to vote in a block with your fellow indeterminates. You may choose to vote for whichever side you fancy.

INDETERMINATE

Character Name: Geoffrey Fische

Your Character:

Geoffrey was born in Lancashire, England in 1605. He grew up in the Anglican church. After a falling out with his family, he ran away to find work and to be his own man. He began to work in the household of the Howards, a powerful Recusant family. From them, he learned of Catholicism and was taken under the wing of the family's confessor. He left England to go to a Jesuit school in Italy after he expressed interest in the order.

Secret Objective:

Geoffrey, as an Englishman you remember when, as a child, the Indian Princess Pocahontas came to England to visit. Learning about her, you read John Smith's account of how she saved him and with him, the Jamestown settlement. You think that the Native women are powerful and good by nature and it would be easier to convert the Indian tribes through appealing to the good nature of their women. If there is a new mission to be created, you want to include Native women.

Convince the Jesuit Council to include women in any new mission.
