

Your Faction: Indeterminate

The Indeterminate members of the Jesuit Council do not have an opinion (at the start of the game) as to whether or not a mission should be sent further into New France.

Therefore, you should be open to listening to the arguments of either side. If you are persuaded by one, vote with that faction. If you are not persuaded by either, you may abstain from the vote.

General Directive

The goal of this game is to use the movie Black Robe as a “primary” source. Imagine it as a record of an actual mission that has made it back to the Jesuit Council.

The Jesuit Council is now set to decide on whether or not there will be another mission sent to New France, based upon the information contained in the narrative account (Black Robe) and other knowledge which is contained on your character sheet.

You are a member of the Jesuit Council, and you get to vote for, against, or abstain to help decide whether or not to send a mission further into New France.

As an Indeterminate, you do not have to vote in a block with your fellow indeterminates. You may choose to vote for whichever side you fancy.

INDETERMINATE

Character Name: Zusto Caravello

Your Character:

Zusto was born in Florence in 1600. He was the son of a very minor female-line branch of the Medici family. He never wanted for anything and had enough political connections to get himself into a cushy priesthood in a church in Naples. However, he was unhappy with life there and desired to return to Florence and continue his studies. He eventually joined the Jesuits when he was 25 years old. Before taking his orders, he had feasted with two kings and a pope.

Secret Objective:

You have undertaken a mission to China yourself and you know that showing a different culture the Light of God can be difficult. You worked hard to understand the Chinese and their ancestor worship and felt it to be an entirely secular rite. Once you understood this, you were able to debate with Chinese scholars about the nature of the divine and were able to convert a few of the higher-ups in the Chinese Imperial Court.

Convince the Jesuit Council to continue the policy of Accommodation.
